INTRODUCTION

Residential and day schools have had a long-lasting effect on First Nations people in Yukon. Non-traditional schooling for First Nations children had started with day schools provided by missionaries around the turn of the twentieth century. The first day schools operated in Forty Mile, Moosehide, Old Crow and Fort Selkirk, which were eventually absorbed into the residential school system. Bishop William Bompas and Bishop Isaac Stringer established the first residential school in the territory in 1911 at Carcross.

One of the main objectives of residential and day schools was to allow First Nations children to adapt to Canadian society. As a result, these children were taken away from their families and traditional way of life. Since Yukon First Nations people were considered wards of the state, governed by the Indian Affairs Branch, funding was eventually provided by the federal government for their schooling.

There were four residential schools established in the territory and one school in northern British Columbia for Yukon First Nations students. Each residential school, Chououtla, Whitehorse Baptist and Lower Post, Aklavik and St. Paul’s School was operated and staffed by a different religious group with funding from the federal Indian Affairs Branch.

The Chououtla Residential School in Carcross was operated by the Anglican Church from 1911 to 1969. Chououtla was also known by the early fifties as the Carcross Indian Residential School.

The Whitehorse Baptist School was established in Whitehorse in the 1940s, and was funded by the Indian Affairs Branch until 1962. In September 1954, there were 140 students. In the following year, due to overcrowding, 60 students were transferred to Chououtla Residential School where more extensive facilities existed.

Aklavik Anglican Indian Residential School was opened in 1927 at Shingle Point. The school was moved to Aklavik in 1934 due to overcrowding.

St. Paul’s Indian Residential School was opened in 1920 in Dawson. The school was closed in 1943 and the building was eventually converted into St. Paul’s Hostel.

Also, a considerable number of Yukon students attended the Lower Post Residential School which was across the BC-Yukon border and run by the Catholic Church until 1975. Lower Post Residential School was established as a result of a merger of 2 day schools, Liard and the Teslin Lake Catholic, in 1951.

As the Yukon government began to establish public schools in all the rural communities there was a gradual movement to close the residential schools and transfer the students into the public school system. Old Crow’s day school was officially transferred from the federal to the territorial government on September 1, 1963. The remaining schools were eventually closed in the late 1970s.
The rural schools were only able to provide Kindergarten to Grade 7 levels. If any student wanted to continue on with their education, they were required to move into Whitehorse or Dawson.

In the years following, there were school hostels - Yukon Hall, St. Agnes, and Coudert Hall, which were located in Whitehorse. A fourth hostel, St. Paul’s, was located in Dawson. These hostels were residences where children lived after attending public school during the day.

The Indian Affairs Branch operated and staffed Yukon Hall for about 25 years starting in the early 1960s. Coudert Hall was operated and staffed by the Catholic Church with federal financing and was closed in the late 1960s.

In the late 1960s, the Villa Madonna Home, operated by the Order of the Sisters of Providence, cared for 12 children. The Ridgeview Home, operated by the Yukon Baptist Missionary Society, cared for 20 children.

This bibliography lists sources of information available at the Yukon Archives that pertain to Yukon day/residential schools and hostels. The bibliography is a partial listing of archival and published information, with a section committed to photographs. The index is mainly for the photographs section and identifies the children and staff members that were named in the caption listing provided by donors or identified later by other people.

#105 The Bishop of Selkirk, William Carpenter Bompas, who had served a number of years in the Fortymile River area near Dawson City, moved to Carcross in 1901. By then almost seventy years old, he had a dream of establishing a church-sponsored community school. It was to be a self-supporting cooperative which could serve the added function of feeding, housing and 'educating' children from all over the Yukon. This photo comes from its early days of operation. Bishop I.O. Stringer who came to the Yukon in 1894 sits at the left. Source: Mr. David Silas
[Bishop Stringer and teachers sitting with a large group of students dressed in suits and dresses with smocks in a formal portrait in front of the school.]

#106 Children attended classes for half the day and worked the other half. Girls were required to cut their hair and were dressed uniformly. Boys were dressed in ties and suits. Certain radical changes in the way of life of Indian families were unavoidable once the school became an established institution. The school housed thirty-five to forty students. Source: Mary Luke

#108 The residential school did allow parents to hunt and trap and assured that their children were getting an 'education'. But it had serious consequences for the family, which had been the basic social and economic unit. Education, once part of family life, now became something distant and removed. Source: Mary Luke. [Students and teachers in an outdoor setting.]

#109 The school was known locally as the Mission School. Here a confirmation class is photographed. Source: Mary Luke
